MAKE A STAND

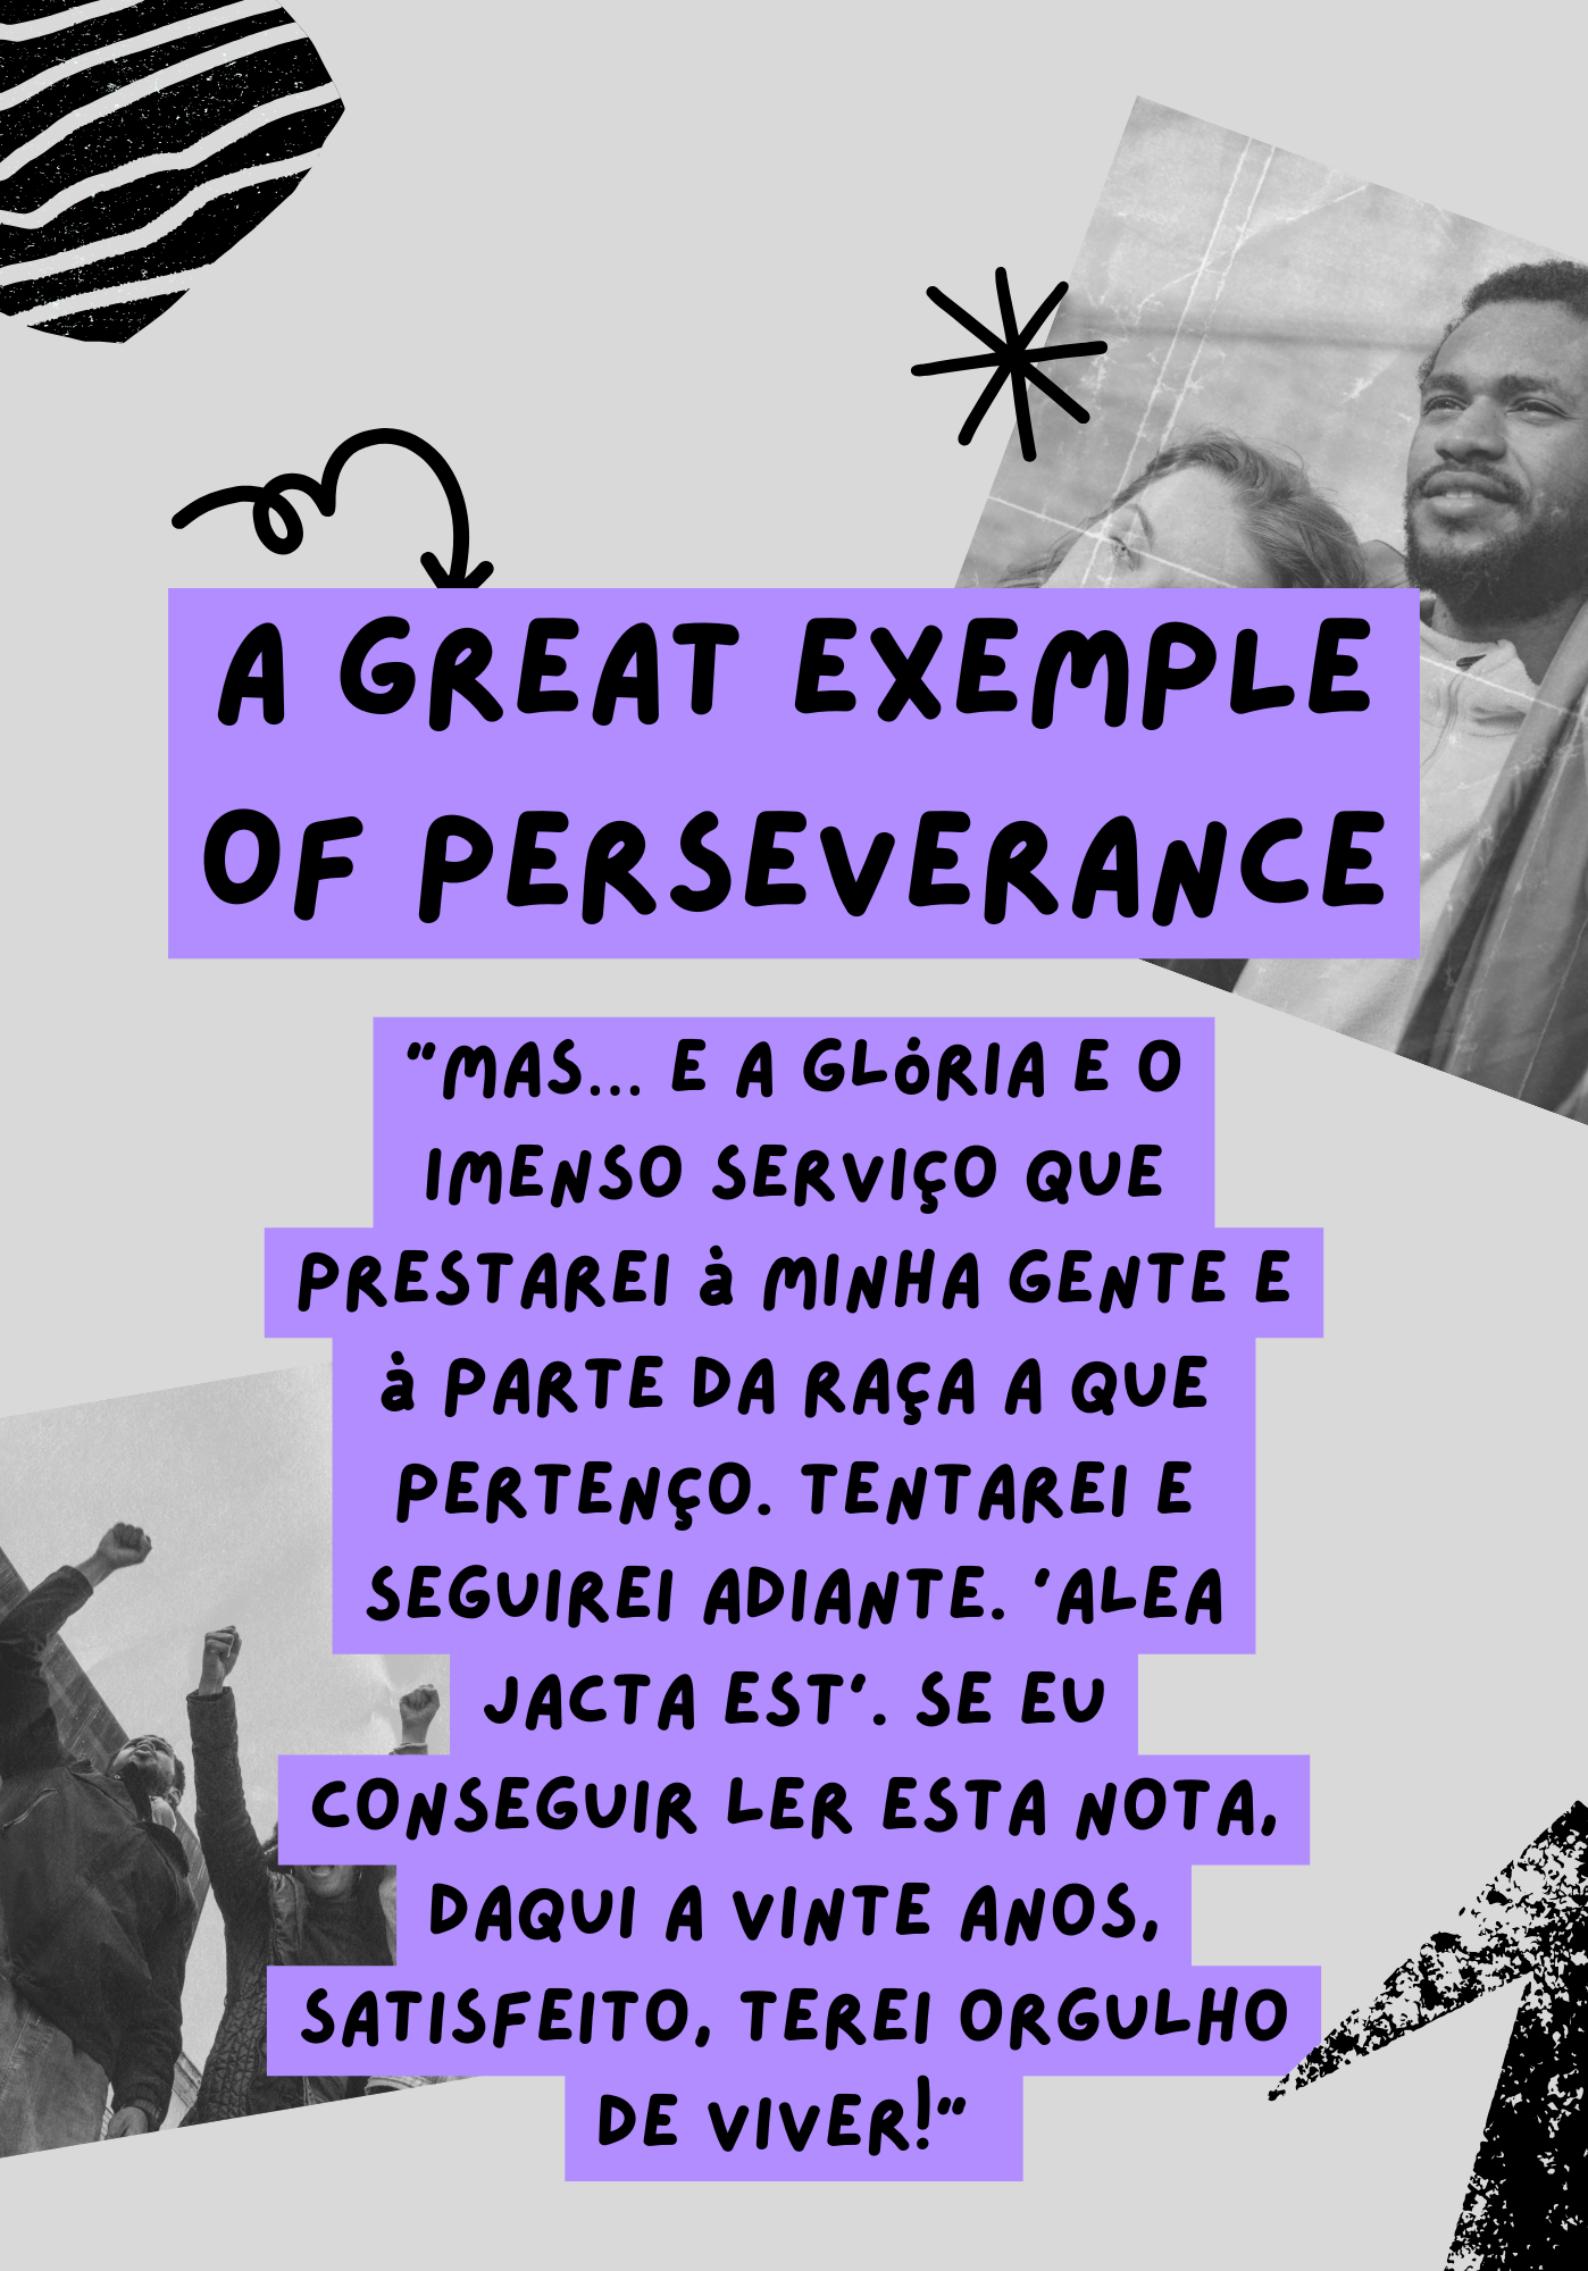

Some call him the Brazilian Dostoevsky, and not without reason. Lima Barreto is a writer of the Brazilian nationalist realist movement, widely known for exposing his critiques of society in an ironic and incisive manner throughout his works.

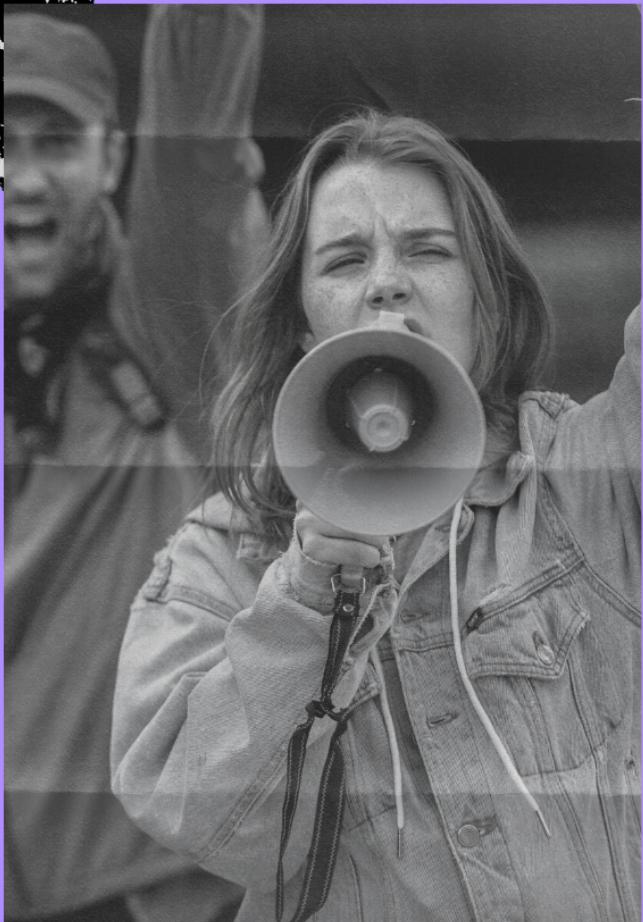

Just like Machado de Assis, Lima Barreto was born into a humble family in Rio de Janeiro. His maternal grandmother, Geraldina Leocádia da Conceição, was a freed slave, and his mother was a teacher who died of tuberculosis when he was six years old. His father worked as a typographer but suffered from mental illness.

BE HEARD

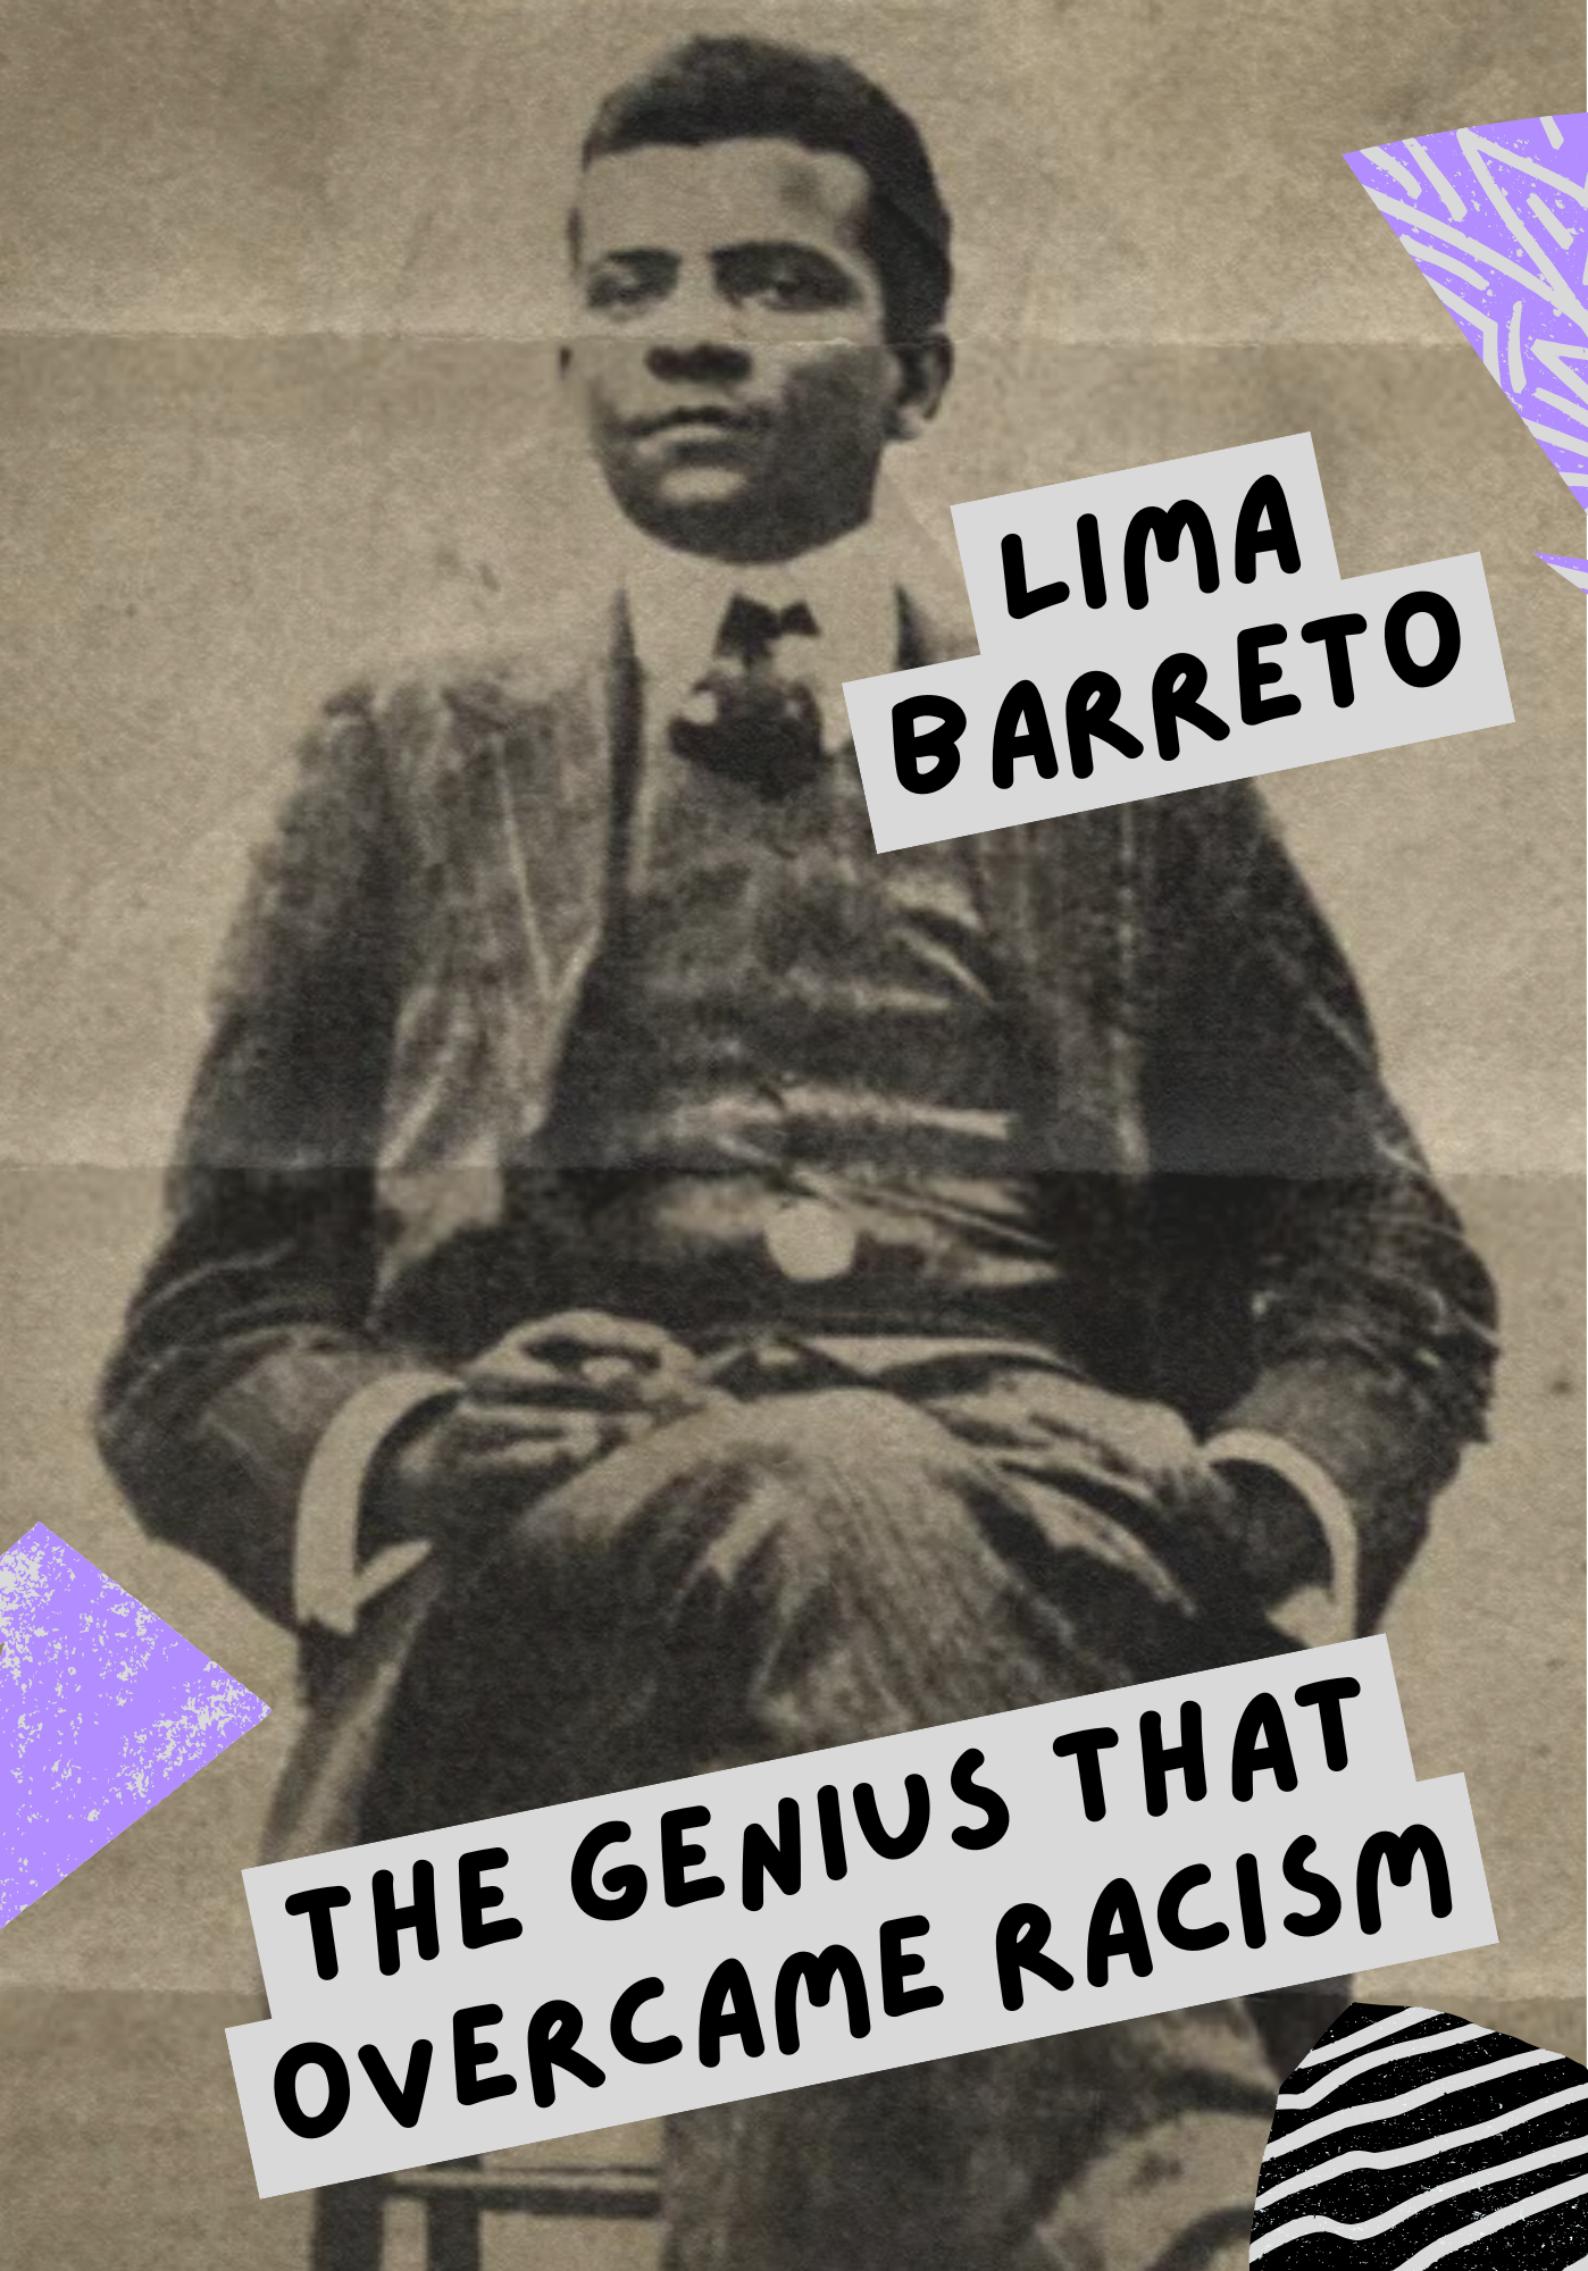

Assisted by his godfather, the Viscount of Ouro, Lima Barreto enrolled at Colégio Pedro II and later became a civil servant, which gave him the time to dedicate himself to writing his works.

REJECTED BY HIS TIME, ACCEPTED IN ETERNITY

His works were rejected in his time, but they eventually endured through
